Micro-Credentials — Competency-Based Learning for Educators

Micro-credentials are a form of recognition for demonstrating competency— often symbolically represented as a digital badges — which operate as a stamp of approval for mastery of a particular skill. Just as SCECHs operate as Michigan's reward system for honoring teachers for the time they spend on their professional learning, micro-credentials operate as a reward system for honoring educators for the competencies they have mastered.

Literacy Essentials — Do Your Part to Boost Our State's Literacy Rate

Literacy researchers have identified 10 essential practices that serve as a "minimum standard of care" when it comes to fostering literate students and literate citizens. Building off this research, we've partnered with GELN's Early Literacy Task Force to do our part to put an end to our state's literacy crisis by offering a series of free online courses on the essential instructional practices in early literacy.

Mentor Meetups — Connect with Fellow Mentors of Online Students

Being the only mentor (or even one of a handful of mentors) for online learners at your school can be an isolating experience. We've found that mentors need more opportunities for community building and professional development as it relates to the unique but critical role they play in their schools. That's why we're offering Michigan mentors opportunities to connect with one another and share best practices.

Instructional Coaching — Empower Your Staff to Personalize Student Learning

Many schools are joining the movement to personalize learning for students. But for teachers, it can be challenging to figure out: How can I possibly personalize learning for all my students when there is only one of me? How can I leverage technology to assist me in this goal? Through face-to-face training events or small-group coaching, our team of former classroom teachers will empower your staff to integrate technology more intentionally to personalize learning for students.
